

Warner's Ranch

San Diego

Warner's Ranch

San Diego

- In 1844 Jonathan Trumbull Warner obtained grants from Governor Pico for more than 26,000 acres in the San Jose Valley. Trumbull later became a state senator.
- Warner's Ranch includes an adobe house structure and barn built in 1857 by Dona Vicenta Sepulveda de Yorba de Carrillo who acquired the valley in 1857 and managed a ranch and store employing hundreds of Indians until 1869.
- The house and barn served as the Butterfield Overland Mail Stage Station from 1858-1861.
- Although the ranch changed hands several times, it was used for raising cattle from 1844 until 1961. It was a stopping place for Kearny, the Mormon Battalion, and army units and others traveling the southern immigrant trail.
- The house was listed as a National Historic Landmark in 1961.

Project Scope:

- Prepare Historic Structures Report and develop restoration and stabilization plans for house and barn. Restore house walls, roof and porch/veranda; stabilize barn and repair roof.
- Conduct archaeological site survey and report, as well as archaeological monitoring during restoration.

Grant Amount: $150,000